Belgium police arrest 16, Paris fugitive still at large

RAF CASERT
FRANK JORDANS
Associated Press

BRUSSELS (AP) — Belgian prosecutors announced early Monday that police had detained 16 people in 22 raids but that Paris fugitive Salah Abdeslam was not among them.

Federal prosecutor Eric Van Der Sypt said that “no fire arms or explosives were discovered,” in the raids — 19 in Brussels and the three in Charleroi in the country’s south. One of those detained was injured when a car he was in tried to ram police during an attempted getaway.

“The investigation continues,” he said.

The raids capped a tense day with hundreds of troops patrolling and authorities hunting for one or more suspected militants, the Belgian government chose Sunday to keep the capital on the highest state of alert into the start of the workweek to prevent a Paris-style attack.

Citing a “serious and imminent” threat, Prime Minister Charles Michel announced that schools and universities in Brussels will be closed Monday, with the subway remaining shut down, preventing a return to normal in the city that is also home to the European Union’s main institutions.

“We fear an attack like in Paris, with several individuals, perhaps in several places,” Michel said after chairing a meeting of Belgium’s National Security Council.

While Brussels was kept on the highest of four alert levels, the rest of the country remains on a Level 3 alert, meaning an attack is “possible and likely.”

“Nobody is pleased with such a situation. Neither are we. But we have to take our responsibility,” Michel said.

Western leaders stepped up the rhetoric against the Islamic State group, which has claimed responsibility for the attacks in Paris that killed 130 people and wounded hundreds more; the suicide bombings in Beirut that killed 43 people and injured more than 200; and the downing of the Russian jetliner carrying 224 people in Egypt’s Sinai Peninsula. All happened within the past month.

“We will not accept the idea that terrorist assaults on restaurants and theaters and hotels are the new normal, or that we are powerless to stop them,” President Barack Obama said in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

French Defense Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian said IS must be destroyed at all costs. □

NYC emergency responders go through active shooter drill

VERENA DOBNIK

Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Hundreds of New York emergency responders simulated a coordinated terror attack Sunday, days before one of the city's biggest public events: the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. The long-planned drill at a Manhattan subway station got a last-minute update in the wake of the deadly attacks in Paris. Officials added an "attacker" wearing a suicide vest.

"In New York City, we are, at this time, very well-prepared and continually improving that preparedness," Police Commissioner William Bratton said outside the abandoned Bowery station in Lower Manhattan.

The three-hour active-shooter exercise took place in the pricey Soho neighborhood populated by art galleries and boutiques. Members of the police, fire and federal Homeland Security departments went into action after a mock call reporting a gunman on the station platform.

Of about 30 simulated straphangers in the station, a dozen suffered "critical wounds" from weapons firing blanks. Firefighters removed them on thick yellow plastic sheets — some covered with fake blood — and law enforcement personnel took on the threat. First responders from various emergency departments worked as a team, with communication and coordination between agencies an important goal.

"There have been very significant improvements in that capacity since 9/11, also the coordination with the fire department," Bratton said.

The Department of Homeland Security used the exercise to test technologies including GoPro-like cameras worn by first responders and acoustic gunshot detection systems designed to give police and firefighters information to coordinate their responses. Such systems are being developed for surveillance of the subway system, the commissioner said.

Sunday's drill was funded by Homeland Security, and Bratton said there would be more such practice runs he says are "vitally necessary" and provide valuable response lessons.

Bratton said New York law enforcement authorities, together with Homeland Security, are working closely with Paris investigators studying details of the Nov. 13 attacks there, aiming to prepare for similar suicide-bomber terrorism that New York has never experienced.

The commissioner said New York would send a law-enforcement team to Paris when that probe was completed to learn as much as possible from those operations.

Mayor Bill de Blasio watched the three-hour drill, later calling it "an impressive display of the capacity of this city to respond."

The Islamic State group, which claimed responsibility for the Paris attacks, has said it would target the U.S., especially Washington and New York. □

Obama warns of overreaction to violent Islamic State attacks

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Trying to reassure a nation on edge, President Barack Obama said Sunday the Islamic State group "cannot strike a mortal blow" against the U.S., and he warned that overreacting to the Paris attacks would play into extremists' hands. "We will destroy this terrorist organization," he vowed. Ending a trip to Asia, Obama implored Americans not to let the specter of terror cause them to compromise their values or change the way they live.

Democrats celebrate victory in Louisiana governor's race

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Democrats in Louisiana celebrated as they reclaimed the governor's mansion in the southern state for the first time in eight years, while the state's Republican leader insisted the party's "brand is strong" even amid the defeat of a one-time political powerhouse, U.S. Sen. David Vitter. Democrat John Bel Edwards' victory in Saturday's runoff election was once-unthinkable in the conservative state and a stunning turn of events for Vitter, who started his campaign nearly two years ago as the race's front-runner. With his 12-percentage point loss, Vitter announced he wouldn't seek re-election to the Senate in 2016. Edwards' win offered a rare pick-up of a governor's seat for Democrats in the conservative Deep South, but Republican leaders insisted it was a one-time fluke that didn't suggest the party was in trouble in Louisiana. Republican Party of Louisiana Chairman Roger Villere pointed to victories for lieutenant governor and attorney general and gains in the state Legislature. "Make no mistake, Louisiana is a deep red state and our Republican brand is strong," Villere said in a statement lamenting a "disappointing result in the gubernatorial race." The Democratic victory was as much about Vitter's flaws as a candidate as it was about Edwards' strengths. Edwards painted the race as a referendum on Vitter's character and suggested the U.S. senator didn't measure up in such a competition. Edwards, who started the campaign as a little-known lawmaker from a rural parish, focused on his West Point degree and military resume, and he pledged a bipartisan leadership style. "The people have chosen hope over scorn, over negativity and over distrust of others," Edwards said in his victory speech, before leading a second-line parade with a jazz band through the French Quarter hotel ballroom. Rather than a race about the state's deep financial troubles, the contest for governor largely became about Vitter, who has been in elected office, first as a state lawmaker and then in Congress, for more than 20 years. But Vitter was hit with repeated attacks for a 2007 prostitution scandal in which he apologized for a "serious sin" after he was linked through phone records to Washington's "D.C. Madam." In the final days, Vitter sought to rally Republican voters by drawing policy distinctions with Edwards and making Syrian refugee resettlement an issue in the state campaign. But it didn't work. "I've lost one political campaign in my life, tonight and ironically it's the campaign and the political effort I am most proud of," Vitter told supporters. The rebuke from Louisiana voters will create an open Senate seat for the 2016 election, as Vitter announced he wouldn't seek re-election to Congress. □

As crime rises in Los Angeles, police, community take action

AMANDA MYERS

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Eduardo Rebolledo had just gotten into his pickup truck after work, eager to head home to his two children when a gang dispute erupted 30 yards (27 meters) behind him on a Los Angeles street. The 38-year-old ducked right into the path of a bullet that hit him in the head, killing him instantly.

"He was completely innocent. The guy's never even had a parking ticket," said Detective Dave Peteque with the Los Angeles Police Department. "He's just a working Joe, a family man trying to support his kids."

In a split second, Rebolledo joined the growing list of victims in the second-largest U.S. city, where murders are up 12 percent this year and shooting victims have increased 20 percent. The city is also on the cusp of recording its 1,000th shooting victim of the year.

After an especially violent weekend in late September, Los Angeles Police Department Chief Charlie Beck expressed his frustration about the bloodshed, particularly among gangs. "This is not Dodge City," Beck said, referring to 19 shootings in one weekend, 13 of which were gang-related.

The increases come as redevelopment of the city's downtown and nearby neighborhoods has attracted trendy new bars and restaurants, thousands of new residents and megaprojects that include a $1 billion mixed-use hotel tower that will be the tallest in the West.

In response to the rising numbers, the LAPD has deployed hundreds of elite officers to crime hot spots, increased the number of officers walking the streets versus patrolling in cars, and created a community relationship division dedicated to building the public's trust in police officers. But Beck said his department can't solve the problem alone.

"A lot of it is public will," he said. "A will of everyone in the city of Los Angeles to say, 'Enough is enough.'" Members of the community say they stepped up their own efforts when the crime numbers started going up.

Rebolledo's death, for instance, inspired a "peace movement" in the neighborhood where he was killed, said Michelle Miranda, founder of Alliance for Community Empowerment, a nonprofit that provides services to disadvantagged young people, including gang intervention. Young people involved with Miranda's organization decided to hold a peace march on a recent Saturday in response to Rebolledo's death. More than 250 people took to the streets wearing white shirts, carrying signs that included: "We protest our right to live in peace."

"These are young people that know drugs in the community and gang activity, and they're tired of it," Miranda said.

Miranda said the same youths who organized the march are working on more plans to continue the peace movement.

At Good News Baptist Church in South Los Angeles, the Rev. Winford Bell began a program through his nonprofit group to train members of the community how to counsel family and friends of people who've been murdered.

The idea for the so-called "life comforters" is to provide a safe outlet to vent anger and sorrow, and wherever possible, attempt to prevent retaliatory violence common among gangs.

"Don't get me wrong, hardcore gang members are not going to hear me. Them we can't do nothing with," Bell said. "The other ones who aren't so hard, who aren't dedicated to being gang members ... If they come, we can do a lot of work." Los Angeles is among a number of major cities across the U.S. seeing rises in violent crime this year, including Baltimore, Washington, D.C., Chicago, Cleveland and Houston. Other California cities also have seen increases, including Sacramento, Oakland and Long Beach. Though the numbers are up, those cities are far safer than they were in the early 1990s during the crack cocaine epidemic. In Los Angeles, for example, murders peaked in 1992 at 1,092 people killed. □

US Financial Front:

Home values point to a sharp wealth divide within US cities

JOSH BOAK

AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's still possible in Boston for a mail carrier, an accountant and a Harvard-trained psychiatrist — basically, the crowd from "Cheers" — to live as neighbors.

That finding by the real estate brokerage Redfin makes the capital of Massachusetts a rarity at a time when neighborhoods in most U.S. cities are increasingly isolated from each other by income and home values.

Redfin analyzed home sales over the past 24 months in 20 major U.S. cities, breaking down the data by neighborhood. Many of the cities reflect home values that have outpaced wages over the past 15 years and contributed to a widening wealth gap among neighborhoods that mirrors a national trend.

San Francisco, for example, enjoys the benefits of tech fortunes, but its homes are largely unaffordable for the police officers, firefighters and teachers the city needs. And while housing in Baltimore seems affordable, low and unstable incomes there have depressed home ownership rates. Ribbons of highways have also ferried the middle class out of cities such as Detroit, leaving behind concentrations of poverty. Redfin said its analysis is a first step in examining changes over time in neighborhoods and in economic mobility.

"Our argument is the shape of the American city is the shape of American life," said Glenn Kelman, CEO of Redfin. "When the only time you meet someone wealthy is when you're handing them a croissant, the likelihood that your kids are going to attend a good school and know how to pursue a career go down."

More than half of Boston contains a mix of high-end and affordable homes, compared with a national average of 13 percent. Boston's most economically mixed neighborhoods tend to be centered around its Roxbury district, a section that has been predominantly working class, black and Latino in a city with a long history of racial and ethnic divisions. Its growing economic diversity reflects the changing character of Roxbury, where many middle-income homebuyers are settling after being priced out of other sections of Boston. The trend has unfolded in Roxbury neighborhoods such as Highland Park and Egleston Square. Real estate broker Christopher Buono said higher prices over the past five years in other areas of Boston have led more buyers into these neighborhoods. And the

The "Painted Ladies," a row of historical Victorian homes, underscore the San Francisco skyline in a view from Alamo Square. Real estate brokerage Redfin analyzed home sales over the past 24 months in 20 major U.S. cities, breaking down the data by neighborhood. Many of the cities reflect home values that have outpaced wages over the past 15 years, causing their neighborhoods to mirror a broader national wealth gap. (AP Photo/Marcio Jose Sanchez) steady flow of students each year to the 35 colleges in Boston has made many homes attractive to investors seeking to rent them out.

Pockets of Roxbury were close to abandoned during the 1970s, said broker Deborah Bernat. But renovations and development have introduced condos and townhomes with such luxury features as gas fireplaces and balconies. The result has been a mixture of blue-collar residents with startup executives.

"Sustainable integration is the goal," Bernat said. "It's one of the things that I love about the neighborhood." To assess affordability, Redfin compared sales prices to median incomes. Other cities with above-average levels of economic diversity include Denver, Seattle and Washington, D.C., which have benefited from an influx of educated workers and technology companies.

But high-tech can also widen the wealth gap. Almost all of San Francisco — the hub for the most prominent software and computer firms — consists of homes worth more than what a middle-income family there can afford. Other cities, such as Baltimore and Philadelphia, contain small clusters of wealthy neighborhoods along with large swaths of relatively low-priced homes, but many residents lack the stable income and savings to buy. In some cases, the data suggest that better-off residents work in a city but live in the suburbs, so that only a small share of the city itself is economically diverse. A mix of high-end and affordable housing exists, for example, in less than 10 percent of San Antonio, Memphis, Jacksonville, Detroit, Indianapolis and Columbus, Ohio. □

Holiday Travel:

Don't let the airlines lose your suitcase this Thanksgiving

SCOTT MAYEROWITZ
AP Airlines Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Heading into winter, fliers should take extra precautions with their checked luggage — December and January are traditionally the worst months for lost bags.

To avoid problems, arrive at the airport early enough to let your bag get to the plane, and print out a copy of your itinerary from the airline's website and stick it inside just in case all the tags get ripped off.

In the U.S. during the first nine months of this year, 3.3 bags for every 1,000 passengers didn't make it to their destination on time, according to the Bureau of Transportation Statistics. That's not great if you are one of those people whose bag is delayed or lost. But consider this: during the 2007 peak in air travel, airlines were mishandling more than twice as many suitcases — 7.2 bags per 1,000 passengers.

Globally, the baggage-mishandling rate has fallen 61 percent from its peak in 2007, according to SITA, an aviation communications and technology provider. That has saved the industry $18 billion.

The vast majority of bags — 80 percent — aren't lost

Travelers wait in line to check in their luggage at Miami International Airport in Miami. Heading into winter, fliers should take extra precautions with their checked luggage, December and January are traditionally the worst months for lost bags.

but just delayed, according to SITA. And it takes about a day and a half to reunite passengers with their bags. Another 14 percent are damaged or have their contents reported stolen. And nearly 6 percent of bags are lost or stolen completely.

December and January tend to be the worst months because there are a lot of infrequent travelers checking multiple bags, and a few snowstorms can add to delays and suitcases that miss connections.

The overall improvements to baggage handling come after carriers spent millions of dollars to upgrade their systems.

Tug drivers now get real-time updates of gate changes so they can change their path and ensure that bags make their connection. Scanners allow bags to be tracked throughout the system, preventing a suitcase bound for Chicago from being loaded onto a plane to Detroit. Gate agents have printers to help tag bags that are checked at the last minute because of full overhead bins. And, overall, fewer bags are being checked because of bag fees. "We continue to invest in technology and in processes so we understand where bags are at all times, and we can manage the failure points," says Bill Lentsch, senior vice president for airport customer service and cargo operations at Delta Air Lines. Airlines are also starting to empower passengers — or at least keep them better informed.

Delta was the first airline to allow fliers to track their own checked luggage, first on the airline's website in 2011 and then on its mobile app in 2012. Bag tags are scanned when the suitcase is dropped off, loaded onto a plane, loaded onto a connecting flight and then again before being placed on the carousel at baggage claim. Passengers can see all those scans.

American Airlines followed suit in August, allowing passengers to see when a suitcase was loaded or unloaded from a plane. Right now, it is only available on the airline's website but will eventually be part of the mobile app.

Sitting on a plane ready for takeoff and knowing that your suitcase isn't in the hold below might be frustrating. But airlines say they would rather have passengers know it then and talk immediately to a baggage representative, once on the ground, instead of standing at the carousel waiting for a suitcase that isn't there. If your bag is late, you might be able to get some bonus frequent flier miles or even a voucher toward a future flight. Since 2010, Alaska Airlines has promised that suitcases will be on the carousel within 20 minutes of the plane arriving at the gate. □

Migrants barred from crossing into Macedonia hold protest

C. KANTOURIS

Associated Press
IDOMENI, Greece (AP) — Migrants barred from crossing the Greece-Macedonia border held a fourth day of protests Sunday, as Macedonia's president criticized the European Union over the refugee crisis for a lack of financial support and data sharing. The influx of migrants into Macedonia has heightened tensions in the country, President Gjorgje Ivanov said. "The risk of possible conflict between refugees and migrants, the migrants and police and army, and between migrants and local people is rated as high,"

Ivanov told reporters Sunday after meeting with visiting European Council president Donald Tusk in Macedonia's capital, Skopje. Several European countries, including EU members Slovenia and Croatia and non-members Serbia and Macedonia, have declared they will only allow "war-zone refugees" from Afghanistan, Iraq and Syria to transit through their countries on their way to central and northern Europe. This policy has left many others stranded in the Greek border town for four days, demanding to be let in and chanting slogans such as "Freedom!" and "We are not terrorists." On Sunday, an Iranian man threatened to cut his wrists with a razor if not allowed into Macedonia. Police intervened to disarm him, but, in the scuffle, he cut his face. The number of migrants being barred from entering Macedonia has fallen significantly Sunday, from more than 2,000 to around 1,300 in the early evening. Many of them took buses and taxis to Athens and Thessaloniki. Greek police believe they may be trying to find other routes, including with the help of smugglers. □

Russia: 11 allied with IS group killed in North Caucasus raids

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian law enforcement officers on Sunday raided a hide-out in the North Caucasus of armed militants allied with the Islamic State group, killing all 11 of them in an exchange of fire, the counter-terrorism agency said. The reinforced base in a wooded, mountainous area on the outskirts of Nalchik, the capital of the Kabardino-Balkaria republic, contained a workshop for producing explosive devices and a stockpile of weapons and ammunition, the National Anti-Terrorist Committee said in a statement. It said all 11 militants were killed after opening fire on the officers and using grenades, while there were no fatalities among the officers. An Islamic insurgency has long simmered in the predominantly Muslim North Caucasus republics of southern Russia. The region, which includes Chechnya and Dagestan, has become fertile ground for IS propaganda and recruitment, and the majority of the estimated 3,000 Russians fighting in Syria are believed to come from the North Caucasus. The agency said the group of militants killed in Sunday's raid were allied with IS and had helped to send local residents to Syria to fight with IS. They also were preparing to carry out attacks in the North Caucasus, the agency said. □

Syrian troops advancing thanks to Russian airstrikes

ALBERT AJI

Associated Press
DAMASCUS, Syria (AP)

Syrian President Bashar Assad says his forces are advancing on "almost" all fronts thanks to Russian airstrikes that began nearly two months ago and have tipped the balance in his favor in some parts of the country.

In remarks published Sunday, Assad told China's Phoenix Television that the Russians depend on Syrian ground forces and "cooperate with us." He added that Syrian troops had achieved victories in some areas before the strikes began but "could not be present everywhere in Syria."

Russia, which has conducted an air campaign in Syria since Sept. 30, sharply raised its intensity in recent days on President Vladimir Putin's orders after Moscow said it had confirmed that a bomb brought down a Russian plane over Egypt's Sinai Peninsula, killing all 224 people on board.

The Islamic State group claimed responsibility for the attack.

"Following the participation of Russian air force in fighting terrorism, the situation improved well. I can say that the army now is advancing almost on every front," Assad said in the interview, which was also carried by Syrian state media.

Assad said the Russian airstrikes are more effective than those of the U.S.-led coalition because Moscow is coordinating with his government, saying "you cannot fight terrorism with airstrikes alone."

Syrian troops have captured dozens of villages in northern and western Syria since the Russian airstrikes began. Their biggest victory so far has been lifting a three-year siege imposed on the military air base of Kweiras by extremist groups in the northern province of Aleppo.

The Russian strikes have not only targeted the Islamic State group, but also Syrian insurgents battling to overthrow Assad, including some Western-backed groups.

Asked if he is going to run for president again if early elections are held, Assad said: "It is my right but it is early to say whether I will run or not." He added that "I will not say that I will not run if I see that this is needed."

A peace plan agreed to last weekend by 17 nations meeting in Vienna says nothing about Assad's future, but states that "free and fair elections would be held pursuant to the new constitution within 18 months."

To clarify the timeline, the U.S. State Department said last week that the clock starts once Assad's representatives and opposition figures begin talks on a constitution. The vote would determine a new parliament, though not necessarily a new president.

More than 250,000 people have been killed since the start of Syria's 2011 uprising, which began as a series of mostly peaceful protests but escalated into an armed revolt against Assad after a harsh government crackdown. Syrian rebels have demanded that Assad step down as part of any agreement to end the fighting. □

Palestinian stabs Israeli woman dead, 3 attackers killed

IAN DEITCH

JERUSALEM (AP)

A young Israeli woman was stabbed to death by a Palestinian who was among three assailants to be shot dead following separate attacks Sunday, Israeli security forces said, with the latest flare-up of violence coming ahead of a visit to the region by U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry.

The 21-year-old Israeli woman was seriously wounded when a Palestinian attacked her with a knife in the West Bank Sunday afternoon before being shot and killed by soldiers nearby, the military said.

Dr. Ofer Merin of the Shaare Zedek Medical Center in Jerusalem said "the young woman was stabbed numerous times in the head, chest and the area of the heart." He said despite attempts by medics to save her, she succumbed to her wounds.

The attack occurred at the Gush Etzion junction near Jerusalem, the scene of multiple Palestinian attacks against civilians and security forces over the past two months.

In an earlier attack, the military said a woman pulled out a knife at the entrance to a military base and began approaching civilians. □

Mali hotel attack aimed at peace talks, say separatists

Tight security surrounds Malian President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita as he visits the Radisson Blu hotel in Bamako, Mali. (AP Photo/Jerome Delay)

BABA AHMED
Associated Press

BAMAKO, Mali (AP) — The assault on a luxury hotel in Mali's capital that killed 19 people was a clear attempt to derail a fragile peace process meant to stabilize the country's volatile north, a representative of northern separatist groups said Sunday. Halting peace negotiations have been dragging on between the central government and northern separatist groups for more than two years in an effort to end the disputes that turned large sections of the country into a haven for radical Islamic militants. The talks have shown some promise in recent months.

The Radisson Blu hotel attacked by two gunmen on Friday was preparing to host a meeting on implementing the latest accords.

"The attack was targeting the peace agreement," said Sidi Brahim Ould Sidati, a representative of the Coordination of Azawad Movements, known by its French acronym CMA. The CMA is a coalition of groups seeking autonomy in northern Mali and includes ethnic Arabs and Tuaregs.

"The jihadis are in different groups but their goal is the same, and that's to hinder implementation of the peace accord," Sidati said.

It was the secular separatist groups that first wrested northern Mali from the government in 2012, using weapons looted from arsenals in neighboring Libya, but they were soon overtaken by al-Qaida-allied radicals.

In 2013, the French pushed the Islamic extremists out of cities and towns though they continue to carry out attacks on U.N. peacekeepers.

The peace talks between the government and the separatists excluded the radicals, who have spoken out against the negotiations, accusing participants of betraying the population's desire for independence. The hotel attack was claimed by the Al-Mourabitoun (The Sentinels) radical group which has links to al-Qaida. □

South China Sea dispute: China tells others don't 'stir up trouble'

EILEEN NG
Associated Press

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — China on Sunday told other countries not to "deliberately stir up trouble" in the disputed South China Sea, while insisting it has no intention of militarizing the strategically vital area even though it has increased construction activities there. Deputy Foreign Minister Liu Zhenmin reiterated China's position that its construction of artificial islands in the sea was designed to "provide public service" to the region by helping ships and fishermen and disaster relief efforts. This also includes military facilities to protect the islands and reefs, which are located far from mainland China, he said. Since 2013, China has accelerated the creation of new outposts by piling sand atop reefs and atolls, and then adding buildings, ports and airstrips big enough to handle bombers and fighter jets — activities seen as an attempt to change the territorial status quo by changing the geography. "One should never link the military facilities with efforts to militarize the South China Sea," Liu said. "This is a false argument. It is a consistent Chinese position to firmly oppose the militarization of the South China Sea." Other countries "should not deliberately stir up trouble but contribute to the peace and stability of the region," he said. Although Liu's statement broke no new ground — China has said this in various ways before — the setting for his remarks was significant: an Asian summit also attended by President Barack Obama, whose administration has backed the Philippines and other Southeast Asian countries who have long-standing disputes with China in the

Early returns: Opposition candidate ahead in Argentine vote

Opposition presidential candidate Mauricio Macri arrives to vote during in a runoff presidential election in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Sunday, Nov. 22, 2015.

PETER PRENGAMAN
Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina
(AP) — Opposition candidate Mauricio Macri took an early lead over the ruling party contender in Sunday's historic runoff to pick a replacement for outgoing President Cristina Fernandez, who along with her late husband dominated Argentine politics for 12 years.

With 38 percent of the votes counted, election authorities said opposition candidate Mauricio Macri had 54 percent support compared to 46 percent for rival Daniel Scioli. The initial returns came after several exit polls suggested that Macri would win. However, Argentine law does not allow the exit polls to release percentages and full numbers until 9 p.m. local time. Macri campaigned on promises to reform and jumpstart Argentina's economy, and went into Sunday's race as the front-runner after his unexpectedly strong showing in the Oct. 25 first round that forced a runoff against Sci-oli.

"We are doing well, very well," said Maria Eugenia Vidal, governor-elect of the Buenos Aires province and a top official in Macri's "Let's Change" coalition. Scioli, who had been expected to win by 10 or more points in last month's six-candidate election, tried to regain momentum by frequently attacking Macri before the runoff. He said a Macri victory would subject this nation of 41 million people to the market-driven policies of the 1990s, a period of deregulation that many Argentines believe set the stage for the financial meltdown of 2001-2002.

While he and close aides expressed confidence early Sunday, nobody from his camp had spoken since the polls closed.

A Macri win would signal a clear end to the era of Fernandez, who along with her late husband and predecessor, Nestor Kirchner, rewrote the country's social contract, gaining both rabid followers and fierce critics along the way. The power couple spent heavily on programs for the poor, raised tariffs to protect local economies and passed several progressive laws, including the legalization of gay marriage in 2010.

Macri frequently repelled Scioli's claim that Macri represented policies of the past, saying he would lead with "21st century development" as opposed to "21st century socialism" — a term used by supporters of the late Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez and his successor, Nicolas Maduro. The election comes at a time when Argentina's economy, Latin America's third largest, has stalled. Inflation is around 30 percent, gross domestic product growth is just above zero and many private economists warn that the Fernandez administration's spending is not sustainable. Macri has promised to address the economic problems and to shake things up regionally. If elected, he said, he would push to expel Venezuela from the South American trade bloc known as Mercosur because of the jailing of opposition leaders under Maduro. That would be a huge change for a continent where many countries, including neighbors Chile, Brazil and Bolivia, have left-leaning democratic governments that have maintained close ties with Venezuela.

Over the course of the campaign, both candidates at times tried to straddle the center. Scioli said he would solve a long-standing New York court fight with creditors in the U.S. who Fernandez calls "vultures" and has refused to negotiate with. Macri flipped his position and voiced support for the nationalization of the YPF oil company and Aerolineas Argentina, popular actions by the Fernandez administration. But there were also clear differences.

Macri, the mayor of Buenos Aires, promised to lift unpopular controls on the buying of U.S. dollars and thus eliminate a booming black market for currency exchange. Doing that would likely lead to a sharp devaluation of the Argentine peso. With low foreign reserves, the government would desperately need an immediate infusion of dollars. □

ECLAC and Ecuador Call for Improving Quantity and Quality of Statistics

--The President of Ecuador, Rafael Correa, and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, Alicia Bárcena, inaugurated in Quito the eighth meeting of the Statistical Conference of the Americas.

ORANJESTAD/QUITO - The

President of Ecuador, Rafael Correa, and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), Alicia Bárcena, made a call to the different social actors recently to improve the quantity and quality of statistics in order to place them at the service of development with equality in the framework of the 2030 Agenda, during the inauguration of the eighth meeting of the Statistical Conference of the Americas (SCA) in Quito. A total of 36 delegations from ECLAC's member and associated states and representatives from 18 United Nations organizations will participate until November 19 at the SCA's meeting, the main forum for the debate of statistics development in the region, which will be held at the Union of South American Nations (Unasur) building in Quito. "The new global agenda for development imposes the need to boost on the national statistical systems a revolution to satisfy the demand of information necessary for its implementation and supervision", Ecuador's President said and added that this implies strengthening the national statistical systems through allocation of resources, existence of legal frameworks that guarantee its independence and innovation in the processes of data generation. Rafael Correa advocated for the need to "break the conceptual inertias and progress towards new metrics that challenge the paradigm of traditional concepts." As an example, he said that not only the "work for the market" should be measured but also the non-remunerated work, as well as the quality of life in general, not only the gross domestic product per capita.

"Statistics must be understood as a public good at the service of our democracies," he underlined.

"The State needs timely and quality statistical information to perform its role in an effective way," said ECLAC's Executive Secretary, who also advocated for guaranteeing the autonomy of national statistic offices and for consolidating its guiding role of the national statistic systems. This should be done with the aim of giving back feedback for politics and building a new equation between State, market and society.

Alicia Bárcena encouraged the region's countries to go beyond traditional measurements and to build metrics that account for distributive inequalities in different spheres. □

JENNA FRYER

AP Auto Racing Writer

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP) —

Kyle Busch opened the season in a hospital bed and ended it in victory lane with the championship trophy.

Busch completed the ultimate comeback Sunday night by winning his first career Sprint Cup title just nine months after a serious crash at Daytona nearly ended his season. He crashed into a concrete wall the day before the Daytona 500 and broke his right leg and left foot.

Despite multiple surgeries and grueling rehabilitation, Busch missed only 11 races and was back in his Joe Gibbs Racing Toyota in late May. NASCAR granted him a waiver to race for the championship if he earned a berth in the playoffs, and Busch was off and running. "I don't know if I quite understand life yet, but there's something to be said about this year," an emotional Busch said on his team radio.

He won the season finale Sunday night at Homestead-Miami Speedway to claim the title, and knocked Kevin Harvick from his perch as reigning champion. Busch also denied Jeff Gordon a fifth crown in his final race. Gordon said before the season started he'd retire after this race.

Harvick finished a distant second, Gordon was a mediocre sixth and Martin Truex Jr., the fourth driver in the championship field, finished 12th.

"You always want to win, but I've learned not to be greedy," Harvick said after his 12th second-place finish of the year cost him the championship.

There was a strong sentimental push for Gordon to go out on top in his final race. But he was only average all season, and that didn't change Sunday night in front of a huge contingent of friends and family that included Formula One champion Lewis Hamilton and Mario Andretti, who both sat atop his pit box at the start of the race.

Gordon led nine laps early in the race and was third for an early restart but he bobbled it and plummeted to eighth. That was about as good as he'd be the rest of the race as he struggled mightily with the handling of his Hendrick Motorsports Chevrolet.

"Gosh, I'm a little disappointed, I'll be honest," Gordon said. "I thought going into the race we had something for them." Gordon eventually made his way to victory lane to congratulate Busch, who began his career as Gordon's teammate at Hendrick Motorsports. Temper tantrums and wrecked race cars led to his release before the 2008 season, and Busch has been chasing a Cup championship ever since.

"All he's been through this year, nobody's more deserving than him," Gordon said of the new champion. Truex, the underdog driving for single-car team Furniture Row Racing, also didn't have enough in his Chevrolet to contend despite a handful of gutsy pit calls the team used out of desperation.

"We really felt like without trying something really different, we weren't going to get there," Truex said.

Bob Foster, former light heavyweight champion, dies at 76

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) —

Bob Foster, the former light heavyweight champion who fought Joe Frazier and Muhammad Ali and went on to become a sheriff's deputy, died Saturday. He was 76.

New Mexico state Rep. Antonio Maestas said in a statement that Foster died at Presbyterian hospital in Albuquerque with wife Rose and his family at his side.

"His wife Rose Foster, his children, and Family thank you for your prayers and support in this time of healing," the statement said.

In Las Vegas before the Miguel Cotto-Canelo Alvarez fight, a 10-count was tolled on the bell at Mandalay Bay in honor of Foster.

Standing 6-foot-3, the big-punching Foster was 56-8-1 with 46 knockouts. He won the light heavyweight title in 1968 when he stopped Dick Tiger in the fourth round of their fight at Madison Square Garden. It was the only time Tiger was knocked out in his career. Two years later, Foster moved up to heavyweight to challenge Frazier for the title. The fight was a mismatch, with Frazier stopping Foster at 49 seconds of the second round.

Foster regained his 175-pound title in his next fight, but in 1972 fought again as a heavyweight, meeting Ali at a Lake Tahoe casino. Again, Foster was overmatched, with Ali knocking him down seven times before the fight was finally stopped in the eighth round.

Foster, who was named the third-greatest light heavyweight ever by Ring Magazine in 1994, made 14 successful title defenses before retiring as champion in 1974. He returned a year later, finally retiring for good in 1978 after being knocked out in his last two fights.

Foster was the Boxing Writers Association of America fighter of the year in 1968, edging Frazier in a close vote. He was inducted in the International Boxing Hall of Fame's first class in 1990.

While still boxing, Foster began his career with the Bernalillo County Sheriff's Department.

Born in Borger, Texas, Foster grew up in Albuquerque and played football at Albuquerque High. He served in the Air Force.

A public service and celebration of life will be held in Albuquerque. □

Kyle Bush

"We felt like we had to take a really big swing at it." That made the championship race a two-car battle between Busch and Harvick, and the outgoing champion simply didn't have enough for Busch.

Busch was headed toward the title via a second or third-place finish in the race when NASCAR called a caution for debris with 11 laps remaining. Team owner Joe Gibbs pumped his fists in frustration, but Busch remained calm in the car. The field headed to pit road, Busch asked for an adjustment, and was second on the restart with seven laps remaining.

He worked his way past leader Brad Keselowski to claim the lead, then Busch pulled away and handily beat Harvick to the finish line by 1.553 seconds. "This is pretty unbelievable. The dream of a lifetime, a dream come true," Busch said.

The title is a sweet reward for Busch, who has made huge personal and professional gains over the last several years. Known as one of most talented drivers in the sport, his temperament often got in his own way. But he has mellowed with marriage, gained perspective after the Daytona wreck, and was determined to be on his feet in the delivery room when wife Samantha delivered their first baby, a boy born in May — right after Busch returned to the race car and celebrated his 30th birthday.

"I just can't believe it, with everything that happened this year, all the turmoil, everything I went through, my wife went through," Busch said. "I said back then, I'll say it again, the rehab and then getting back and getting focused was the hardest part, the hardest thing I've ever gone through. "To put it all together here tonight, this night wasn't all that hard."

His title is the first for Toyota, which joined the Sprint Cup Series in 2007 and had shots at championships but came up empty again and again. It was also fitting because Joe Gibbs Racing dominated a huge portion of this season and was the overwhelming favorite to win the title with one of its four drivers.

Busch also joins older brother, Kurt, as a NASCAR champion. Kurt Busch won the title in 2004, the inaugural season of NASCAR's Chase format.

The system has been tweaked several times and is in the second year of an elimination format that sends four drivers to Homestead to race for the title. The first driver to the finish line hoists the Cup, and Busch won it by winning the race, the same way Harvick did a year ago.

The title is the fourth NASCAR crown for Joe Gibbs, a three-time Super Bowl winning coach, but first Cup title since 2005. □

Djokovic beats Federer in straight sets to win at ATP finals

CHRIS LEHOURITES
AP Sports Writer

LONDON (AP) — As usual this season, Novak Djokovic was the best player on the court. The top-ranked Serb won his fourth straight title at the season-ending ATP finals on Sunday by beating six-time champion Roger Federer 6-3, 6-4. Djokovic, who won three Grand Slam titles this year and reached the final in the other, capped the best season of his career with another superb display, including winning 16 of the 19 points on his second serve and saving both break points he faced. "I couldn't ask for a better finish of the season,"

Djokovic said. "For some reason or another, I've been playing some of my best tennis after the U.S. Open, in Asia and also indoors, both Paris and London." Federer beat Djokovic on Serb with a back injury. "Maybe at times I went for too much." Federer finishes his season with a 6-5 record in finals, with all five losses to Djokovic. Two of those of those came at Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, giving Djokovic his ninth and 10th major titles.

For Djokovic, it was a season to remember.

Besides becoming the first man to win four straight titles at the tournament for the top eight players in the world, Djokovic also will finish the season at the No. 1 player for the fourth time in five years. He won the Australian Open, Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, and reached the final at the French Open.

The latest victory, his 82nd of the year, evens the head-to-head record against Federer at 22-22. On Saturday in the semifinals, he evened his head-to-head record against Rafael Nadal at 23-23.

"Those two rivalries made me a better player, the player I am today, no doubt," Djokovic said. "Made me understand what I need to do both on and off the court to be able to be in this position now." On the court, both Djokovic and Federer had break chances in the opening two games, but both managed to save them. The first breakthrough for Djokovic came in the third game. With Federer serving at 30-30, the Swiss player thought he had his first ace of the match. But Djokovic challenged the call, and won. □

Tuesday in the group stage, but the 17-time Grand Slam champion made too many mistakes in the final on Sunday. Federer ended up with 31 unforced errors, including 15 from his usually reliable forehand. He even gave away the final point with his second double-fault of the match. "It would have been nice to serve a little bit better early on in the match, play better overall on his second serve, because he does allow you to play on his second serve," said Federer, who lost to Djokovic in the 2012 final and pulled out of last year's championship match against the

Kerr wins title, Ko takes $1 million, Park going to Hall

TIM REYNOLDS
AP Sports Writer

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — Cristie Kerr was the player of the week. Lydia Ko was the player of the year and pocketed another $1 million bonus. Inbee Park will be among the players of all-time.

One tournament, three women celebrating. And just as the LPGA Tour intended, the season finale was dramatic until the end. Kerr won the season-ending CME Group Tour Championship on Sunday, taking the lead for good with a 12-foot eagle putt on the par-5 17th and soon wrapping up her 18th career victory. Her $500,000 first prize, which pushed her career earnings past $17 million, almost seemed ancillary given the stakes that Ko and Park were playing for this week.

"Good golf is just good golf," Kerr said. "It doesn't really matter what age it is. I think I proved that."

Kerr is 38, and says she doesn't plan on slowing down anytime soon. Ko is still just 18, and became the fourth player to go from rookie of the year one year to player of the year the next. The others on that list: Nancy Lopez, Beth Daniel and Annika Sorenstam. Greats all, and Ko is well on her way to that same status.

"I said if I could choose one of the awards, I would choose player of the year," Ko said. "To know that I am the player of the year, it's an awesome feeling."

Ko won the $1 million bonus for winning the Race to the CME Globe, just as she did last year. And Park wrapped up a trip to the LPGA Hall of Fame by winning the scoring title, meaning the only step that now remains between her and induction is completing her 10th season on tour next year, a prerequisite for eligibility.

"It's been a long season," Ko said. "Up and down. Mostly ups."

Kerr shot a 4-under 68 and finished at 17-under 271, one shot better than Gerina Piller and Ha Na Jang. Lexi Thompson was fourth at 14 under. She and Paula Creamer were among a group of U.S. Solheim Cup teammates who doused Kerr with champagne on the 18th green moments after she tapped home a 2-footer to end the season. France's Karine Icher was fifth at 13 under. Park was alone in sixth, good enough to beat Ko by three shots over the course of the entire season for the Vare Trophy and the 27th point she needed for her trip to the LPGA Hall.

"I said the Hall of Fame will be my last goal, but it really came early and I achieved pretty much everything I set so far in my career," Park said. "There is plenty other goals to set."

The pressure was obvious, all over the final back nine of the year.

Thompson had an 8-foot birdie putt on the par-5 14th, and never got it near the hole. Park missed a 2-footer for par on the 12th, then rallied with consecutive birdies. Stacy Lewis, one of three women who entered the week controlling their destiny in the $1 million race, gave her wedge a smack after needing two shots to escape a bunker at the 16th. Ko had a birdie try at 16 not long afterward, leaving it uncharacteristically short. But in the end, Kerr, Park and Ko did enough to all come away with big prizes. "Pretty cool," Kerr said. "A lot of different honors." Kerr shot four rounds in the 60s, made a 35-foot birdie putt at No. 15 to tie for the lead, then the eagle at the 17th put her on top for good.

Park was second in the Globe chase, pocketing a $150,000 bonus. Thompson was third, taking home $100,000 in bonus money — though she spent much of the afternoon in position to sweep both the $500,000 first prize and the $1 million bonus.

"It's been a special year for the tour," Ko said. □

Cristie Kerr poses for photos while holding the trophy after she won the LPGA's CME Group Tour Championship golf tournament at Tiburon Golf Club on Sunday, Nov. 22, 2015, in Naples, Fla. Kerr won the event at 17 under par.

Triple G and Canelo could be boxing's next big thing

TIM DAHLBERG

AP Boxing Writer

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Canelo Alvarez hadn't even had time to celebrate his win over Miguel Cotto when the subject of Gennady Golovkin came up. Golovkin was watching at ringside, and had to like what he heard. "With all due respect, if he wants to fight right now I'll put the gloves on and fight him," Alvarez said.

That didn't happen Saturday night at the Mandalay Bay casino, but Alvarez may not have to wait long. The two biggest names in the middleweight division are on a collision course that could end with them in the ring together sometime next year in a megafight that could make many fans forget the retired Floyd Mayweather Jr. It's a fight both boxers want, and one fight fans are beginning to thirst for. Two big punching middleweights in their prime with all the major titles and boxing supremacy at stake. "Gennady Golovkin is a great fighter, and he is my friend," Alvarez said. "I have respect for him, but if we do fight, it's going to be at my weight class. I'm the champion, and I don't have to do what he wants." Alvarez can afford to be

Alvarez staked his claim to being the best in the division with a unanimous decision over Cotto that wasn't as lopsided as the three judges scoring ringside made it look. One gave Alvarez 11 of the 12 rounds in a fight that Cotto was competitive in all the punches, landing 118 of them to 75 for Cotto. The pro-Alvarez crowd that filled the Mandalay Bay arena liked what they saw from the Mexican star, especially in the later rounds when the two traded more punches. picky, but not for long. The 160-pound title he won by beating Cotto comes with strings attached — a mandate by the WBC for him to fight his fellow middleweight champion in a unification bout. One scenario would be for both boxers to fight other opponents in the spring — Alvarez has the Cinco de Mayo weekend Mayweather always favored for his big pay-per-view fights already lined up — and then meet in September. "This fight will take Canelo to a whole new level," said Oscar De La Hoya, who promotes Alvarez. "This is a new era in our sport." This being boxing, of course, there's no guarantee the fight will take place. The two fighters have different promoters and differing agendas. But they know each other well and have sparred together several times. They also know the millions each way to the final bell. Alvarez never really seemed to hurt Cotto, though he threw the harder punches all night. While Cotto tried to mix it up and box from the outside, Alvarez patiently walked him into some big shots that proved the difference. It wasn't a great fight, but it was certainly a good one. And while Cotto was bitterly disappointed, the outcome was almost surely good for a sport thirsting for good young talent. Cotto left the ring quickly after the fight, leaving trainer Freddie Roach to speak for his effort. "We thought it was much closer than the score cards showed," Roach said. "It was a very competitive fight." That was reflected in ringside stats that showed Cotto throwing more punches (629-484) than Alvarez but landing less (155-129). Alvarez was credited with throwing more power loss of his career — a 2013 decision to Mayweather — solidified his position as a pay-per-view draw in the fight. The red-head known simply as "Canelo" among fans has consistently drawn big, enthusiastic crowds. The performance against Cotto will surely draw more fans to his side. But Triple G has his fan base, too, selling out Madison Square Garden last month for a dominating win over David Lemieux. It was Golovkin's pay-per-view debut and, though it didn't sell in big numbers, the fight was a coming out bout of sorts for those not familiar with the undefeated knockout artist from Kazakhstan, who now lives in Los Angeles. With Mayweather retired, there's an opening for other fighters to take his place. Unlike Mayweather, both Alvarez and Golovkin bring plenty of firepower into the ring, something that fight fans love to see. □

Utilities see potential in drones to inspect lines, towers

BY MARY ESCH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLenheim, N.Y. (AP) -- U.S. utilities see great potential in the use of remote-controlled drones to do the often-dangerous work of inspecting power lines and transmission towers but strict regulations have so far slowed adoption of the technology.

The remote-controlled devices make the work of linemen safer, more efficient and less expensive, according to the Electric Power Research Institute, which last month put on a three-day workshop to help nearly a dozen utilities choose the best machines for the job. Miniature helicopter-like drones, some equipped with cameras and other sensors, conducted demonstration inspections of transmission lines at a hydroelectric plant in the Catskill Mountains.

"We want to start using drones next spring when the inspection season begins," said Alan Ettlinger, research and technology director for the New York Power Authority, who attended the workshop. Utilities spend millions of dollars inspecting power lines, which are often in hard-to-reach places. The industry has been interested in the potential use of drones for years, but has been slower than European companies to adopt the technology because of U.S. regulatory restrictions.

In a Wednesday, Oct. 21, 2015, photo, Bernd Lutz, CEO of Boulder, Colorado-based bizUAS Corp., which provides drone services for utilities and other industries, prepares to demonstrate the use of a Cyberhawk octocopter drone for power line inspections at a New York Power Authority site in the Catskills, near Blenheim, N.Y.

Associated Press

While hobbyists can fly drones without certification, the Federal Aviation Administration requires special certification for commercial users. There are numerous conditions and limitations: The drone operator needs a pilot's license, the aircraft must weigh less than 55 pounds, flights can go no more than 200 feet above the ground, and the drone must be operated in the pilot's line of sight.

The FAA treats the operation of drones like any other aircraft for safety reasons and commercial operators face strict rules for getting permission to use them, according to the agency. Seven U.S. utilities have been granted FAA approval for testing drone technology in 2015. Consumers Energy in Michigan conducted a series of tests over the summer using its own eight-rotor drone and unmanned aerial vehicles operated by outside vendors to inspect wind turbines, utility poles and transformers. The utility is part of a UAV task force under the Edison Electric Institute, the association representing U.S. investor-owned electric companies. "When you look at the amount of information we can gain to make accurate decisions about our systems, and look at the cost and time savings, this is a huge opportunity for us," said Andrew Bordine, a Consumers Energy executive.

The UAV system Consumers Energy uses starts at about $10,000, Bordine said. Sensor attachments range from a few thousand dollars to upward of $100,000, he said. But the cost savings are far greater than the investment.

Consumers Energy spends several hundred thousand dollars a year to send people out in the field to do mapping and measuring of its electrical system, Bordine said. A UAV equipped with "lidar," the sensor technology used to develop driverless cars, can collect the same data and more at a small fraction of the cost and time.

"With wind turbines, you'll have a couple of guys hanging off the blades by a rope a couple hundred feet in the air to do inspections visually, at a cost upwards of $10,000 per site," Bordine said. "We can get the same results with a UAV for $300, without putting workers in danger."

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports 17 fatal work injuries among utility workers in 2014, but doesn't specify the cause.

Other industries, including oil and gas drillers, pipeline operators, construction companies, and agriculture are also investigating the use of drones to make inspection and mapping tasks faster, more accurate, safer and less costly.

"The main advantage we provide in small unmanned assets is safety," said Mark Sickling, chief pilot for Cyberhawk, a drone company based in the United Kingdom that does aerial inspections for utilities and the oil and gas industry. At the workshop, Sickling demonstrated Cyberhawk's most popular drone, the eight-rotor G4 Eagle, which boasts "unprecedented flight and image stability."

The work done by Consumers Energy over the summer could also be done with a drone flying without direct human control using instructions entered into an onboard flight computer if the FAA allowed it, Bordine said.

"The FAA is looking at how to revamp its requirements to make the technology more accessible to more companies," Bordine said. "A goal for me would be to get FAA approval to work with a remote application and an autonomous flight." □

Insurers reassure investors about ACA exchange business

TOM MURPHY
AP Business Writer

Health insurers rallied Friday to ease investor and customer concerns about the Affordable Care Act's

Shares of Molina and other insurers plunged Thursday after UnitedHealth Group cut its 2015 forecast, reported deep losses from its exchange business and their commitment have had some growing pains. Aetna said last month that it lost money last year on the business, and it's in the red this year as well.

to the business and "continuing our dialogue with policymakers and regulators regarding how we can improve the stability of the individual market."

The not-for-profit insurer Kaiser Permanente also said late Thursday that it remained "strongly committed" to participating in the exchanges. Kaiser covers about 450,000 people in nine exchanges, and a spokeswoman said they are confident that the business is financially stable. Molina said his company has been helped in the exchange business by expanding slowly and focusing on a customer base it already knows how to serve, low-income patients.

"We're not trying to be all things to all people," he said.

Even though some insurers have made money so far on the exchanges, industry analyst David Windley sees room for improvement. Insurers are still struggling to attract enough healthy patients, and the analyst said it's too easy for customers to manipulate the system by doing things like signing up for coverage, using health care, and then stopping premium payments.

UnitedHealth said Thursday it has been hurt in particular by customers who signed up for coverage outside the annual open enrollment window and use more health care in general than those who bought coverage during open enrollment. □ public insurance exchanges a day after the nation's biggest insurer questioned its future in that still-developing market.

Blue Cross-Blue Shield insurer Anthem and Medicaid coverage provider Molina Healthcare both said they are making money off their exchange business, and Anthem joined Aetna, the nation's third-largest health insurer, in reaffirming its 2015 earnings forecast.

"I think the (ACA) marketplace is going to be around for a while," said Molina CEO Dr. Mario Molina.

said it will decide next year whether it wants to continue in that market. That followed reports earlier this fall that several smaller, nonprofit insurance cooperatives would stop selling coverage on the state-based exchanges, which are a key element in the ACA's push to expand insurance coverage.

Insurers in many markets have struggled to find the right mix of healthy customers to balance the sicker ones since the exchanges opened for business in the fall of 2013. Even businesses that reaffirmed

But the insurer expects improvement, in part because it is learning more about the customers it serves through this business. That will help it set the right prices for future coverage.

Anthem, the nation's second largest insurer, said its enrollment in the public exchanges fell by 69,000 people to 824,000 in the third quarter. Spokeswoman Jill Becher said the business has been less profitable than expected.

CEO Joseph Swedish said in a statement that the insurer remains committed

Ford workers approve new UAW contract

DEE DURBIN
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Ford workers narrowly approved a new four-year contract, wrapping up five months of negotiations between the United Auto Workers union and Detroit automakers. The UAW said this weekend that Ford's contract passed with a 51.4-percent vote. The agreement covers 53,000 U.S. hourly workers at 22 plants.

"There is no higher authority than the membership. Through a fair and democratic process UAW-Ford members have delivered job security and strong economic gains for their families and communities," said UAW Vice President Jimmy Settles, the union's top Ford negotiator, in a statement.

Union leaders held a press conference earlier this week to push for the Ford agreement when they feared workers would reject it. Some workers said the union didn't push hard enough to win back things they lost in previous agreements, including annual wage increases. They also wanted a two-tier wage system eliminated immediately instead of over eight years, as the contract promises.

But union leaders warned that they might not get a better deal from Ford if workers rejected the agreement and sent them back to the bargaining table.

"If we thought there was another dollar on the table, we would have got it the first time," said Bernie Riche, the president of Local 600, a large union in Ford's hometown of Dearborn.

The contract raises wages for all workers and gradually eliminates the two-tier system, which currently pays newer workers less than veteran ones. It promises bonuses of up to $10,250 per worker this year and annual profit-sharing checks and other bonuses each year after that. □

Mega-deals may carry into 2016 for health care

TOM MURPHY
AP Business Writer

(AP) - With $2 trillion in buy-outs since January, 2015 has become the year of the megadeal, fueled by free money in a zero-interest rate environment.

But with the Fed appearing increasingly keen on hiking rates, that party may be coming to an end.

That is, unless you're in health care.

Almost one out of every four dollars in takeovers this year involved a company in health care, and the size of those deals is immense.

Compared with five years ago the total value of health care mergers and acquisitions in the United States has more than tripled, according to the data firm Dealogic.

Even in the face of rising interest rates, which would make deal-making a more expensive proposition, business insiders see few reasons why momentum in the health care sector will cool any time soon. There is too much to gain. Drugmakers still need to buy drugs and companies that promise to give them a sizeable competitive advantage and sell the ones that don't as they pare their focus. Health insurers, doctors and hospitals are pushing to get bigger and bring more muscle to their negotiations with each other over the ever-rising cost of care. The Blue-Cross Blue Shield insurer Anthem

Inc. is spending $48 billion to buy rival insurer Cigna, a deal that would create a combined company pulling in well over $100 billion in revenue. These deals also allow companies to combine resources and cut expenses at a time when every element of the sector is feeling pressure to control health care costs.

"Health care firms, in general, I believe will need to get bigger," Morningstar analyst Vishnu Lekraj said. □

Report: Pfizer, Allergan close to $150 billion merger deal

NEW YORK (AP) — Pfizer Inc. and Allergan PLC are on the cusp of reaching a $150 billion deal that would create the world's largest drugmaker by sales, The Wall Street Journal reported Sunday, citing unnamed people familiar with the matter.

According to the newspaper, terms of the deal include 11.3 Pfizer shares for every Allergan share, along with a small cash component. The boards of each company were expected to approve the agreement Sunday and it could be announced Monday.

Pfizer and Allergan representatives declined to comment.

If a deal is reached, it would be the biggest ever merger in health care and the largest "inversion" ever — that's a tax-saving maneuver in which a U.S. company reincorporates in a country with a lower corporate tax rate. Inversions have become a hot political topic, raising the ire of lawmakers in Washington and public interest groups.

Botox maker Allergan is based in Ireland but runs much of its operations out of Parsippany, New Jersey. To help secure that lower tax rate, the deal will be technically structured as a reverse merger, with Allergan buying New York-based Pfizer, according to the newspaper's report.

Pfizer, the maker of Viagra and Lipitor, has been dealing with tough competition from generics and pressure from investors to stimulate growth. Generic competition is expected to cut Pfizer's sales by $28 billion from 2010 through next year. It's done three sizeable deals since 2000 to boost revenue.

Buying Allergan would add its brand-name medicines for eye conditions, infections and heart disease to Pfizer's extensive portfolio of vaccines and drugs for cancer, pain, erectile dysfunction and other conditions. It would also allow Pfizer, the world's second-biggest drugmaker by revenue, to surpass Switzerland's Novartis AG and regain the industry's top spot. □

Abercrombie cuts back on sales and it pays off in 3Q

NEW ALBANY, Ohio (AP) —

Taking a path at odds with other retailers who have slashed prices to lure customers through the door, Abercrombie & Fitch focused instead on reinvigorating its brand and it paid off in the third quarter as profits more than doubled. Investors, rattled by weak sales and dismal forecasts from the sector, rewarded Abercrombie this weekend. Shares jumped more than 20 percent Friday, the biggest one-day percentage gain in three years.

"Our third quarter results exceeded our expectations coming into the quarter and provide the strongest validation yet that our initiatives are working," said Executive Chairman Arthur Martinez.

The shift in strategy can be seen in the company's quarterly adjusted gross profit rate, which was 63.7 percent. That's an improvement of 120 basis points, and 210 basis points on a constant currency basis, over last year.

For the period ended Oct. 31, Abercrombie & Fitch earned $41.9 million, or 60 cents per share. A year earlier it earned $18.2 million, or 25 cents per share. The performance looked even better thanks to an improved tax situation, which turned into $5.9 million on the plus side this quarter. Last year, the company incurred an expense of approximately $9.6 million.

Earnings, adjusted for non-recurring gains, were 48 cents per share. That blew past the per-share projections of 19 cents on Wall Street, according to a poll by Zacks Investment Research.

Revenue for the New Albany, Ohio, company totaled $878.6 million, also handily beating analyst expectations for $869 million.

"Customers responded favorably to the company's recent floorsets despite reduced promotions," wrote

Richard Jaffe, an analyst with Stifel, Nicolaus We believe ANF's momentum is sustainable. Sales at stores open at least a year dipped 1 percent. The metric is a key indicator of a retailer's health because it excludes volatility from recently opened or closed.

But that decline in the current environment appeared palatable for investors. Late Thursday, Gap reported a 4 percent decline at name brand stores, and a 12 percent decline at its Banana Republic locations. Its Old Navy stores did much better, however. Abercrombie's Hollister locations led the way, where same-store sales rose 2 percent, which offset some weakness at name brand stores. □

American homebuilder sentiment slips in November

ALEX VEIGA
AP Business Writer

U.S. homebuilders are feeling slightly less confident in their sales prospects heading into next year, even as their overall sales outlook remains favorable.

The National Association of Home Builders/Wells Fargo builder sentiment index released last week slipped this month to 62, down three points from a revised reading of 65 in October.

Readings above 50 indicate more builders view sales conditions as good, rather than poor. The index has been consistently above 50 since July last year.

Builders' view of current sales conditions and their outlook for sales over the next six months also declined. A measure of traffic by prospective buyers rose slightly. The latest builder index represents a pullback from October's reading, which hit the highest level in 10 years, and is more in line with the consistent, modest growth in new home sales seen this year, said David Crowe, the NAHB's chief economist. "A firming economy, continued job creation and affordable mortgage rates should keep housing on an upward trajectory as we approach 2016," Crowe said. Solid hiring over the past three years has improved many family balance sheets, while rising home prices has returned equity to current homeowners now seeking to upgrade to new residential developments. Sales of new homes have soared 17.6 percent during the first nine months of 2015.

Still, new-home sales plunged sharply in September to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 468,000, the slowest pace in 10 months. The decline snapped a two-month streak of accelerating sales.

Sales of new homes remain below the 52-year historic average of 655,200.

This month's builder index was based on 364 respondents.

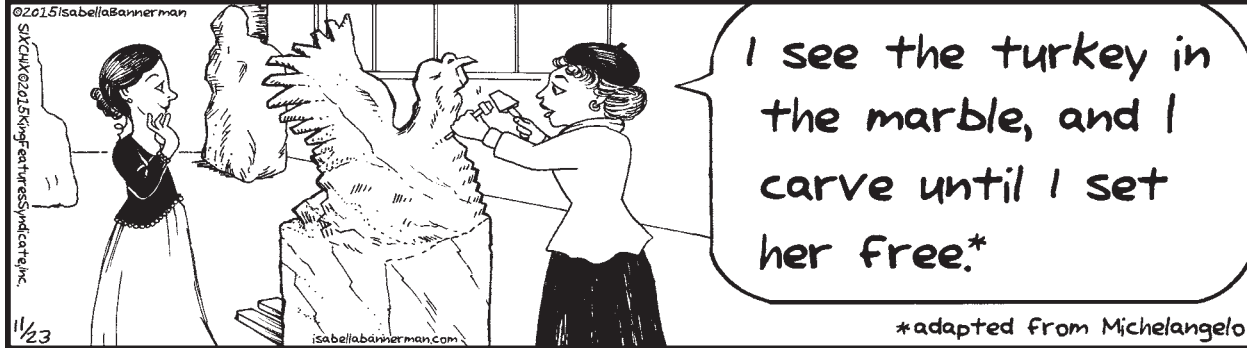

Builders' view of current sales conditions for single-family homes fell three points to 67. □

Iran sentences US journalist to prison

NASSER KARIMI
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran has sentenced detained Washington Post journalist Jason Rezaian to an unspecified prison term following his conviction last month on charges that include espionage, Iranian state TV reported Sunday. Gholam Hossein Mohseni Ejei, the spokesman for Iran's judiciary, announced the punishment in a statement on the TV station's website.

"In brief, it is a prison sentence," he said. The verdict is "not finalized," he added, referring to an expected appeal.

Ejei was responding to a question from a local reporter at a weekly news conference. He said the verdict has not been officially communicated to Rezaian or his lawyer.

Rezaian's lawyer, Leila Ahsan, told The Associated Press she had not been informed of the verdict — let alone details of the sentence.

"I have no information about details of the verdict," she said. "We were expecting the verdict some three months ago." Rezaian was detained with his wife, Yeganeh Salehi, and two photojournalists on July 22, 2014. All were later released except Rezaian, a dual U.S.-Iranian citizen.

Rezaian went on trial in four closed-door court hearings at Tehran's Revolutionary Court, which hears cases related to national security. Last month, he was convicted of spying and other charges.

The Post has vigorously denied the accusations against its correspondent.

"We're aware of the reports in the Iranian media, but have no further information at this time," Washington Post foreign editor Douglas Jehl said in a statement.

"Every day that Jason is in prison is an injustice. He has done nothing wrong. Even after keeping Jason in prison 488 days so far, Iran has produced no evidence of wrongdoing. □

Great Lakes levels expected to stay mostly above average

JOHN FLESHER

AP Environmental Writer

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP)

— Water levels in the Great Lakes should remain mostly above average over the next six months as a powerful El Nino gives the region a break after two bitterly cold winters, but it's unclear whether there will be longer-term effects, federal scientists said Thursday.

El Nino, the warming of surface waters in the Pacific Ocean that can significantly influence weather in North America, is expected to bring milder temperatures and less snow across the lakes that hold nearly one-fifth of the world's surface fresh water, National Weather Service hydrologist Jim Noel said.

Those conditions are unlikely to alter the seasonal pattern of Great Lakes levels, which tend to rise in spring, peak in summer and decline in fall, said Keith Kompoltowicz, hydrology chief with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' district office in Detroit. But the fluctuations may be less pronounced than usual, partly because of El Nino's effects on evaporation and precipitation. "We don't see any extreme events in terms of lake levels on the horizon," Kompoltowicz said as scientists released an updated forecast for the Great Lakes, which have rebounded sharply after a prolonged slump that lasted from 1998 through 2012.

Lakes Huron and Michigan have enjoyed the most dramatic improvement, rising nearly three feet — their biggest two-year jump on record. It's been a relief for cargo shippers, marina owners and property owners along shorelines where retreating water had given way to muck and weeds. Mild air temperatures this fall may lower evaporation rates, resulting in less of a drop-off in water levels than usual, Kompoltowicz said. But if snowfall declines this winter as expected, the spring rise in water levels might also be reduced. Spring runoff of the snowpack is a key factor in determining lake levels. Lakes Superior, Huron, Michigan and Erie should remain at above-average levels for the next six months, he said. Lake Ontario, which is controlled by a hydroelectric dam on the St. Lawrence River, is expected to be near or slightly below its long-term average.

The scientists were reluctant to extend their prediction beyond six months, although Kompoltowicz said a return to colder temperatures in fall 2016 could bring greater-than-usual evaporation.

They noted that Great Lakes water levels have gone in different directions after the two strongest El Ninos prior to the current one. After a powerful El Nino in 1982-83, the lakes rose and hit record highs by 1986. But another El Nino in 1997-98 was followed by a nearly 15-year decline.

"That just shows there's a lot more in play here, and it's impossible to pin a lot of what we can expect in terms of levels on the Great Lakes to just one climate signal," Kompoltowicz said. □

Record number of stranded seal pups in Northern California

SAUSALITO, California (AP)

— Marine mammal experts say another species of marine wildlife has begun turning up, emaciated and weak, in record numbers on the California coast in what has been a series of alarming signs of oceanic distress.

Unhealthy northern fur seal pups have been found stranded on beaches in record numbers, newly weaned and weighing little more than the typical birth weight for the species, experts at the Marine Mammal Center near Sausalito said.

"They're adorable, but on the other hand they're these little bags of skin and bones," said Jeff Boehm, the center's executive director.

As of Friday, the Marine Mammal Center near Sausalito had taken in 85 northern fur seals, which live out in the Pacific Ocean's waters and islands and would only rarely be found on shore, the Santa Rosa Press Democrat reported Saturday.

According to the center, that number is more than double the previous record of 31 pups in 2006. Veterinarians estimate they are between 4 and 5 months old.

The stranded northern fur seals are the latest in a string of alarming marine events. Experts have been working all year to address an "unusual mortality event" among California sea lions. In addition, wildlife rescue crews have been trying to rehabilitate a record number of the rarely seen and endangered Guadalupe fur seal pups, also showing up stranded. □

Hollywood studio pays off 'Barefoot Bandit's' restitution

SEATTLE (AP) — A Hollywood studio has paid more than $1 million to settle the "Barefoot Bandit's" court-ordered restitution in exchange for the rights to his story.

The studio, 20th Century Fox, wrote a check to the U.S. Marshal's office earlier this month. It was the final payment toward Colton Harris-Moore's restitution, The Seattle Times reported. The "Barefoot Bandit's" life on the run is now headed toward the big screen. The money mostly paid for three small airplanes he stole and crash landed and a boat he hijacked in the Bahamas while evading capture.

Harris-Moore was sentenced to 6 ½ years in federal prison in 2012 for the theft of the airplanes, a boat and guns during a crime spree that began when he escaped from a Renton juvenile halfway house in 2008.

A book and a documentary of his exploits already have been published.

The Internet made Harris-Moore a cult hero, and at one time, he had nearly 50,000 followers on his Facebook page, where he would occasionally leave a post written on a stolen laptop.

He eluded a massive man-hunt, while police warned that he was dangerous. Harris-Moore said he taught himself how to fly using flight manuals and a computer flight simulator, according to court documents.

While he was able to get the planes off the ground and pilot them, sometimes in bad weather, he had a tougher time with the landings. Harris-Moore crashed all three of them, acknowledging in defense documents that he very nearly died in a September 2009 crash of a stolen Cessna that went down near Granite Falls in Snohomish County.

During his 2012 sentencing before U.S. District Judge Richard Jones, Harris-Moore said his dream of flying was the only thing that saved him from the nightmare of a childhood of neglect at the hands of an abusive alcoholic mother. He said some of the burglaries he committed were done to steal food so he wouldn't starve.

The federal sentence was set to run concurrently with a 7 1/2-year sentence imposed in a state court for a series of home and business burglaries. □

Last 'Hunger Games' opens to franchise low of $101 million

LINDSEY BAHR

AP Film Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Mockingjay — Part 2," the final "Hunger Games" film, soared to a $101 million opening in its first weekend in theaters, according to Rentrak estimates Sunday. For most films, the figure would be a coup, but the latest chapter of "The Hunger Games" collected the lowest opening take among the four films in the series.

The series starring Jennifer Lawrence kicked off with a bang in March 2012 with a massive $152.5 million weekend — one of the highest openings of all time.

"Catching Fire," the second film in the franchise, one-upped that with a $158.1 million debut in November 2013.

Lionsgate split the final book in Suzanne Collins' trilogy into two films, following the precedent of "Twilight" and "Harry Potter."

"Mockingjay — Part 1" opened on this weekend last year to $121.9 million, considered at the time to be a necessary and expected dip while fans awaited the final installment, which, if it had mimicked "Twilight" or "Harry Potter," would have snared at least the second-highest (if not highest) opening in the series.

The franchise low for the final "Hunger Games" film, which cost a reported $160 million to make, was a bit of a surprise. Lionsgate, however, was not disappointed.

"It's a great accomplishment. The overall franchise has grossed over $2 billion worldwide and counting," said David Spitz, co-president of theatrical distribution for Lionsgate. "It's a pretty phenomenal result." Expectations run high when films become so popular and successful in such a short a time, said Paul Dergarabedian, a senior media analyst for Rentrak.

"If we live in a world where a $100 million opening is a disappointment, that's pretty crazy," he said. Only 34 movies in history have opened at over $100 million, including all four in "The Hunger Games" series.

Dergarabedian attributes the showing to a down marketplace. Just two weekends ago, "Spectre," which fell to second place this week with $14.6 million, failed to live up to the domestic opening of "Skyfall," the previous James Bond film.

"Thanksgiving represents a good opportunity for a really strong second weekend," Dergarabedian said of "Mockingjay — Part 2." With $12.8 million, "The Peanuts Movie" finished behind "Spectre" and ahead of the Seth Rogen holiday comedy "The Night Before," which earned an expected $10.1 million. The R-rated film cost about $25 million to produce.

"This is a movie that people love. Opening early seemed like a really good prelude to the Thanksgiving weekend where it will expand beautifully," said Rory Bruer, Sony's president of worldwide distribution. "It's a good start for us."

The Julia Roberts thriller "The Secret in Their Eyes," a remake of the Oscar-winning Argentinian film, debuted wide this weekend to $6.6 million from 2,392 locations — slightly under expectations.

With the weekend box office down 11 percent from last year, it remains to be seen whether 2015 will indeed become a record-breaking $11 billion year as many predicted at the outset. Box office is up 4.2 percent from last year, but 2013 is the year to beat — and this year is tracking less than 1 percent ahead of that.

"We're in the home stretch," Dergarabedian said. "But remember, we have a little secret weapon in 'Star Wars.'" □
